The front page of our website has a link to the attached guidance document -
<https://www2.illinois.gov/sites/agr/Pages/default.aspx>.

Other than this guidance, we are unable to provide medical guidance to producers or pet owners. It is advised they call Carus for contamination/clean-up issues and contact their veterinarian for specific questions/medical issues with their pets (as indicated in the attached document).

An animal owner or a veterinarian can also call the ASPCA Animal Poison Control Hotline directly for assistance with potential toxic ingestions/exposure. There is a fee for this service to private vets and animal owners, but in cases where there are potential symptoms, toxic levels, or treatment is unknown, the ASPCA Animal Poison Control Hotline is staffed by veterinary toxicologists who can provide the best assessment and treatment recommendations (if an animal owner calls, the hotline can assess if medical treatment is indicated).

All,

Please see the emails below from Carus in regards to community questions. If each of you could review this and provide some guidance to me that would be appreciated. Thank you!

Mike – I know the storage of chemicals is not mentioned but I think it would be good to have something in there about it

Thanks!!

Hey Guys –

See the note from JoLynn below. We are trying to specify the right numbers to call for questions or issues related to air quality, health concerns, and livestock/animal safety.

Are there any reference documents or suggestions you have other than to use what general hotline numbers we can find online? Thank you for any suggestions you may have.

Joe,

We have identified some key themes from the community hotline and local social media groups. Neighbors seem to be concerned with air quality, health concerns and safety of animals and livestock. We are working on a larger press release and plan to include resources including the Carus community hotline and other regulatory groups.

I'd like to provide the best contact information for groups like the US EPA, Illinois EPA, Health Department, Department of Ag, DNR, etc. Do these groups have a preferred phone number or website for us to refer people to?

Thanks,

JoLynn Anzelc
